Nikolai Dzhumagaliev

He studied in a railway school and did the mandatory military service in the chemical defense corps at Samarkand and Otar. During the last one, Dzhumagaliev murdered a female friend and began to dismember her with an ax in the room next to where two other guests were. After the bus left, he undressed the body and cut out the breasts, organs, hips, and thighs, which he put in a backpack and took home. Though considered a "second-rate man" physically, and known for missing his front teeth as a result of a fistfight (which he had replaced with white metal dentures), he was valued for being always clean-shaven and well-dressed, and had little trouble picking up women and having casual sex. Dzhumagaliev blamed women as a whole, and he developed an intense hatred for them. Nikolai Dzhumagaliev was a Russian serial killer and cannibal, one of the worst criminals of the former Soviet Union, who killed about 50 people. After these two setbacks, he traveled through the Ural, Siberia, and Murmansk, taking various blue-collar jobs. A bus stopped by that section of the road for a time, during which he hid next to the corpse and used it for warmth.

Contents [1] Background Dzhumagaliev was born to a Kazakh father and a Belarussian mother in Uzun-Agach (modern Uzynagach, Kazakhstan), a town near Alma-Ata (now Almaty), the then-capital of the. In 1977, he returned to Uzun-Agach, where he took a job as a firefighter Shortly after, he was diagnosed with two sexually transmitted diseases, syphilis and trichomoniasis. Unaware of the serial killings, the police arrested Dzhumagaliev for manslaughter, but he was found not guilty by reason of insanity after he was diagnosed with schizophrenia at Moscow's Serbsky Institute. He was the fourth of five children, and his childhood was completely normal by all accounts. When she turned back, he grabbed her, dragged her to the side of the road, and slashed her throat while he raped her, drinking the blood emanating from the wound afterwards.

In 1973, he applied both to enter Kazakh University and for a chauffeur job, but he failed on both accounts. They observed Dzhumagaliev without him noticing them, fled, and reported him to the police. However, he was arrested the next day in his cousin's home. The officers were so shocked to find Dzhumagaliev hacking the corpse while in the male and covered in blood, that he was able to escape without incident, still armed with the ax. He cooked the flesh and ate it for the next month Though a criminal investigation was opened for the grisly murder, it was closed because of the lack of leads. He selected a Seventh Day Adventist woman walking alone by the side of the road between Uzun-Agach and Maibulak and approached her from behind. Dzhumagaliev murdered five more women over the following six months, but on August 21, he shot a firefighter colleague during a drunken fight. Dzhumagaliev in the 1980s Dzhumagaliev was released after a year and returned to Uzun-Agach, where he killed three more women and served their flesh to unsuspecting friends in cookouts.
